

The Institute of Geologists of Ireland

The Institute of Geologists of Ireland provides professional accreditation for geoscientists in Ireland and promotes the interest of its members in Ireland and internationally.

The IGI offers members:

- The Professional Geologist (PGeo) title
- The European Geologist Professional title (EurGeol) which is recognised widely across Europe
- Mutual recognition of qualifications between Ireland and Australia, Canada, South Africa, United Kingdom and the United States of America
- Courses for continuing professional development
- Best practice guidelines
- Access to Professional Indemnity and other insurances
- Direct professional access to barristers
- Specialist member registers for landfill hydrogeological assessment and pyrite work
- Advocacy and representation on committees including the European Federation of Geologists

Join the IGI

Professional membership is open to all practising geoscientists who meet the required standards of qualification and experience. The IGI requires members to uphold, develop and maintain the highest professional standards. For information on how to apply, please visit www.igi.ie.

The IGI provides career-long support for geoscientists, with a member-in-training category for those working towards the PGeo title, the full PGeo Member category and membership for associate and retired geoscientists. Membership reflects the wide diversity of disciplines within the geosciences including geology, hydrogeology, mineral and petroleum exploration and development, engineering geology, environmental geology, geophysics and geochemistry.
